Abstract

African philosophy has emerged as a significant field within global intellectual traditions, offering unique insights into ethical and moral frameworks that resonate with contemporary debates in ethics. The analysis will draw upon existing literature from both traditional African philosophy studies and contemporary Western ethical theories, emphasising comparative insights between these discourses. African philosophy offers a nuanced perspective that complements existing global ethical frameworks by integrating cultural specificity with universal ethical principles. Encouraging further interdisciplinary research that bridges African philosophy and contemporary ethics could lead to more inclusive and culturally sensitive approaches to ethical discussions globally.

Keywords: Egyptian philosophy, Africana philosophy, Ubuntu, moral pluralism, critical theory, hermeneutics, dialogical ethics
