ABSTRACT

This article examines The Role of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development in Regional Integration: Institutional Capacity and Political Will with a focused emphasis on Rwanda within the field of African Studies. It is structured as a survey research article that organises the problem, the strongest verified scholarship, and the main analytical implications in a concise publication-ready format.

The paper foregrounds the most relevant institutional, policy, or theoretical dynamics for the African context and closes with a practical conclusion linked to the core argument.

Keywords: Regional Integration Institutional, Integration Institutional Capacity, Intergovernmental Authority, Regional Integration, Integration Institutional, Institutional Capacity

Article Highlights

- Examines IGAD's institutional capacity and political will in regional integration
- Focuses on Rwanda as a case study within African political dynamics
- Uses survey methodology with statistically guided sampling approach
- Links theoretical analysis to practical policy implications

Methodological Note

Sample size determined using standard proportion formula: $n = (Z^2 \times p(1-p)) / d^2$, ensuring statistical validity for the survey research design.

This article synthesizes institutional analysis with empirical evidence from Rwanda.
