Abstract

Ghanaian psychology is a field that has seen significant growth in recent years, with an increasing emphasis on integrating sustainable development principles into its practice and research. No empirical results are provided in this theoretical framework article; instead, it synthesizes existing literature on sustainable development and its applications in Ghanaian psychology. This theoretical framework provides a foundation for understanding sustainable development dynamics within Ghanaian psychology, highlighting its importance in both academic research and practical applications. Future researchers and practitioners are encouraged to adopt the proposed model as a guide for integrating sustainable development principles into their work, thereby contributing to more holistic and culturally sensitive psychological approaches.
