Abstract

Land reform policies in East Africa have been implemented to address issues of land tenure insecurity and promote equitable access to resources among rural communities. A mixed-methods approach was employed, involving quantitative surveys ( $n=500$ )  $\wedge$  qualitative interviews ( $n=50$ ). Data collection took place over two years, from to . The survey revealed that land reforms have led to a 26% increase in household income among the surveyed population, with significant improvements noted in crop yields and livestock productivity. Land reform initiatives have had positive socio-economic outcomes for rural communities in Morocco, contributing to improved livelihoods and food security. Further research is recommended to explore long-term impacts and sustainability. Policy makers should continue monitoring the implementation of land reforms and consider integrating social safety nets to mitigate potential negative effects on vulnerable groups.
