Abstract

Religious pluralism in West Africa is a complex interplay of various religious practices coexisting alongside indigenous beliefs and secular viewpoints. The research employs in-depth interviews and ethnographic observations among religious leaders and community members across different faiths, aiming for comprehensive understanding of the subject matter. A notable finding is that inter-faith dialogue groups have significantly increased communication channels between adherents of Christianity, Islam, and indigenous beliefs over the past decade. The study underscores the importance of fostering mutual respect and constructive engagement in religious pluralistic settings to mitigate potential conflicts and promote social cohesion. Policy makers should encourage inter-faith initiatives that facilitate dialogue and understanding among diverse religious communities, particularly in urban areas where diversity is more pronounced.
