

The Evolution of Philosophical Thought in Post-Colonial Tanzania within an African Context

Kamano Ngoma¹

¹ University of Dar es Salaam

Published: 15 February 2002 | Received: 28 October 2001 | Accepted: 17 January 2002

Correspondence: kngoma@yahoo.com

DOI: 10.5281/zenodo.18739845

Author notes

Kamano Ngoma is affiliated with University of Dar es Salaam and focuses on African Studies research in Africa.

Abstract

Post-colonial Tanzania has seen a complex interplay of philosophical thought influenced by both indigenous traditions and external colonial influences. The study employs a multidisciplinary approach, integrating historical analysis with philosophical discourse to explore the philosophical landscape of Tanzania since decolonization. Interviews, archival research, and secondary data from scholarly works are used for evidence-based insights. A significant theme emerging from the findings is the revalorization of indigenous philosophies within Tanzanian academic circles, particularly in universities, where there has been a noticeable increase in courses that incorporate traditional African wisdom into contemporary education. The study underscores the resilience and adaptability of African philosophical thought in post-colonial Tanzania, showcasing how scholars are revitalizing and reinterpreting indigenous philosophies to address modern societal challenges. Future research should explore more comprehensive case studies within specific Tanzanian universities to further elucidate the integration process and its effects on student learning outcomes.

Keywords: Tanzania, Geography, Post-Colonialism, Cultural Studies, Philosophical Traditions, Methodology, Multidisciplinary Approaches

ABSTRACT-ONLY PUBLICATION

This is an abstract-only publication. The complete research paper with full methodology, results, discussion, and references is available upon request.

✉ REQUEST FULL PAPER

Email: info@parj.africa

Request your copy of the full paper today!

SUBMIT YOUR RESEARCH

Are you a researcher in Africa? We welcome your submissions!

Join our community of African scholars and share your groundbreaking work.

Submit at: app.parj.africa

Scan to visit app.parj.africa

Open Access Scholarship from PARJ

Empowering African Research | Advancing Global Knowledge