Abstract

Youth entrepreneurship in Lagos, Nigeria has emerged as a critical component of economic recovery post-COVID-19. However, the effectiveness of loans for youth entrepreneurs remains underexplored. Theoretical analysis focusing on existing literature and economic models. A comprehensive theoretical model of youth entrepreneurship loan effectiveness post-COVID-19 in Lagos is proposed. Policy makers should consider loan conditions, sector-specific support, and long-term job creation initiatives to enhance the impact of youth entrepreneurship loans.
