Abstract

The post-colonial era in Egypt has seen a resurgence of interest in African philosophical thought, reflecting broader global intellectual trends. A comprehensive literature review was conducted using databases such as JSTOR, Google Scholar, and Egypt's National Library archives. The analysis reveals a significant increase in publications on African philosophy from onwards, with themes including Pan-Africanism and decolonization. Egyptian scholars are increasingly engaging with African philosophical thought, contributing to regional intellectual circles. Future research should focus on comparative studies of Egyptian and other North African approaches to African philosophy.

Keywords: African diaspora, Pan-Africanism, postcolonial theory, decolonization, cultural nationalism, hermeneutics, critical race studies
